

Websites General Wellbeing and Crisis support (not necessarily on Indigenous communities)

- <https://canberraheadtohealth.com.au> [Free support for patients and organizations. Important contact details available on different kinds of helplines including after-hour and suicide prevention]
- <https://www.healthdirect.gov.au/amp/article/mens-mental-health> [Crammed with reading material which might not be practical but has some good links]
- <https://www.ruok.org.au/findhelp>
- <https://www.beyondblue.org.au> [A good idea of free online test for mental health included. Could be useful to us. Other than that this is a well established organisation with many donors]
- <https://www.moodgym.com.au/> [This is a good, convincing website for our reference on app development. Its very well structured. Please check this out]
- <https://stride.com.au/> [Tailored support for families and individuals, community goals, employment and homelessness also addressed. Very practical, however not specific to Indigenous community]
- <https://www.ruok.org.au/findhelp> [This could be a relevant reference for us because they have a disclaimer that they are not for crisis support and they are not professional providers but more like community based and connectors for well being]
- <https://winnunga.org.au/sites-of-interest/> [This has an extension to many other community based webs for Indigenous sites of interest.]
- <https://www.13yarn.org.au/> [Definitely important link. Its specific to Indigenous community and is 24/7. We could email or call them for our inquiries to support them from our capacity]

<https://headspace.org.au/yarn-safe/> {Indigenous community web. Good rare find}

- <https://www.openarms.gov.au/> [this is for veterans and for the army in general. Definitely not relevant to us but the website has an interesting option for ‘Audio series’ podcasts. This could work for indigenous community which may be able to connect more and spend more time on our app if there are engaging podcasts from the community. Also this website has better drop down filters, which can be relevant]
- <https://www.counsellingonline.org.au/> [alcohol and drug counselling. Very relevant as this is a major cause of crisis in indigenous communities. The interface isn’t bad]
- <https://www.mindspot.org.au/> [okayish website but major supporters of indigenous communities in ACT]
- <https://www.sane.org/> [easy to understand website. To the point]
- <https://butterfly.org.au/get-support/helpline/> [this is specifically for eating and body image disorders. We can only add such links on our app under information and access]
- <https://parentsbeyondbreakup.com/> [community based, practical and for fathers only.]

Apps

- https://www.menzies.edu.au/page/Research/Projects/Mental_Health_and_wellbeing/Development_of_the_Stay_Strong_iPad_App/#:~:text=The%20AIMhi%20Stay%20Strong%20App%20is%20an%20innovative%20tool%20that,Mental%20Health%20Initiative%20\(AIMhi\)..) [highly recommended]
- https://www.menzies.edu.au/page/Research/Indigenous_Health/

- <https://www.blackdoginstitute.org.au/resources-support/digital-tools-apps/> [This has a link to different apps and some online tests that can come handy for us as extended tools and references in the app]
- <https://www.yarn.com.au/blogs/yarn-in-the-community/apps-a-new-way-of-providing-mental-health-resources-for-indigenous-communities> [According to this link there are two major apps Yarn Up Feel Deadly and iBobbly but the links are not working properly]
- <https://wellmob.org.au/> [There are many small scale Indigenous community based apps]
- https://wellmob.org.au/key-resources/resources/47601/?title=Gundirr&contentid=47601_1
- https://wellmob.org.au/key-resources/resources/46507/?title=AIMhi+Y+app&contentid=46507_1
- https://wellmob.org.au/key-resources/resources/45980/?title=Biik+bilik&contentid=45980_1
- https://wellmob.org.au/key-resources/resources/47975/?title=Gurray&contentid=47975_1
- https://wellmob.org.au/key-resources/resources/27981/?title=AIMhi+Stay+Strong+app&contentid=27981_1
- https://wellmob.org.au/key-resources/resources/29607/?title=My+QuitBuddy++mobile+app+&contentid=29607_1

Others

<https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC8614130/> [this is a valuable research article on a mobile apps positive impact on wellbeing and reduced health risks among Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women during preconception and pregnancy. It already has a lot of what we were planning to search! Check this excerpt directly copied from it:

-“Women advised the app needs to include similar qualities to apps that the women already use; Apps most frequently used had characteristics that insisted participants return to the app on a daily/intradaily basis. Community and social connection were the number one instigator for increased engagement in a potential app with other features to prompt women to return to the app daily such as daily questionnaire and notifications also being of relevance. Women wanted the app to incorporate social and community interaction features, however, discussions on practical implications of managing a community forum were raised, it was agreed that this could only be incorporated if moderated by the project team to ensure that the advice provided through forums is relevant and accurate.

Women suggested the user experience is guided based on demographic and health related questions so information provided to women is relevant, for example, non-smokers should not be shown smoking cessation related information. App content should be brief and to the point with video content strongly advised. Wording was highlighted as requiring attention to be concise and appropriate. Participants discussed how different Aboriginal communities use different words and this would require careful consideration if an app was designed.

A native app that can be run both on the android and iOS operating system should be made as women possessed both types of smartphones. Women made recommendations on the visual look and feel of the app based on examples provided.”

-Check out the table 2 part because it mentions key features of the app. Table 4 shows honest feedbacks and how the functionality wasn’t great as per some users.

-“Developing a mobile phone app, particularly in an Aboriginal community setting, requires extensive consultation, negotiation and design work. Using a strong theoretical foundation of BCTs coupled with the consultative approach has added rigour to this process”]

-Tackling more than one risk factor at a time (multihealth behaviour interventions) is an emerging area of public health research.

-Aboriginal young people are adopters of new technologies and avid users of social media

-In our recent study, Aboriginal women in NSW reported having a smartphone (94%) they could download an app to, and had phone or data credit most of the time (~90%).²⁵ When women were asked to nominate their top three topics for an app from a list, 82% included SEWB, 55% nutrition, 31% bush tucker, 22% to stop smoking, 10% pregnancy and 8% to stop alcohol or drugs.²⁵

-Women spoke of a desire for an app made specifically for Aboriginal women that incorporated culture, history and art.

-Lots of interesting personal testimonials such as “Some of the pages that I follow are mums getting back into the fitness world. When I see them doing it, it makes me feel like I can”., “In the videos, for example. I guess it makes us feel more comfortable when we see other people like ourselves. That’s what draws us to things that we choose to watch and listen to or read about”, “If I see it advertised on Indigenous pages and stuff, yes, I would. See other woman using it, I would, yes, give it a go”.

- <https://www.aihw.gov.au/reports/australias-health/indigenous-health-and-wellbeing> [Interesting stats]
- <https://www.indigenousmhspc.gov.au/getattachment/5f8b477d-af2b-4921-97e6-29ecf1f65b46/aihw-digital-mental-health-resources.pdf?v=1499> [All the facts, research and justification we need!]
- <https://healthinonet.ecu.edu.au/learn/health-topics/social-and-emotional-wellbeing/>